Ignoring the threat of white nationalism didn't work.

The New York Times Magazine's November 3, 2018 cover story detailed the mix of indifference, apathy, and ignorance that allowed the threat of white nationalism to grow.

U.S. Law Enforcement Failed to See the Threat of White Nationalism. Now They Don't Know How to Stop It.

For two decades, domestic counterterrorism strategy has ignored the rising danger of far-right extremism. In the atmosphere of willful indifference, a virulent movement has grown and metastasized.

BY JANET REITMAN NOV. 3, 2018

In 2018, right-wing extremists killed more people than any year since 1995.

That includes the 11 individuals killed in the anti-Semitic attack on Tree of Life in Pittsburgh.

Anti-Semitic incidents surged 99% from 2015 to 2018.

In 2019, the numbers were not much better: nearly all murders by domestic extremists had ties to right-wing extremism, including white supremacy.

From Pittsburgh to Poway to El Paso and beyond, white supremacist violence continues to grow.

Charlottesville was a flashpoint.

In August 2017, hundreds of white supremacists and neo-Nazis invaded Charlottesville, Virginia for two terrifying days.

- August 11 - They marched with torches and swastikas, chanted “Jews will not replace us” and “blood and soil,” and surrounded a group of students and community members on the University of Virginia campus. They pushed, punched, and threw lit torches. Religious leaders and community members attending an interfaith service at a nearby church sheltered in place, fearing that they would be next.
- August 12 – They marched military-style to Emancipation Park, shouting racist, anti-Semitic, and homophobic slurs. They surrounded the sole Jewish synagogue in Charlottesville, chanting “Seig Heil” and talking about “torching those Jewish monsters.” They charged through a line of interfaith clergy. They attacked and assaulted countless community members. And after police dispersed them, James Alex Fields, Jr. drove his car into a crowd of peaceful protesters, killing 32-year-old Heather Heyer and injuring many others.

Defendants were clearly motivated by anti-Semitism and other forms of hate.

“Blood and soil”

“Jews will not replace us”

“White lives matter”

“There is, however, one particular way in which anti-Semitism is being mainstreamed in the United States and in Europe: the propagation of ‘blood and soil’ right-wing nationalism that by definition excludes Jews (whom many nationalists do not consider white).”

The Washington Post

The Charlottesville leaders were motivated by the same anti-Semitic “Replacement Theory” seen later in Pittsburgh, Poway, and El Paso.

Roughly 24 million U.S. adults believe it is acceptable to hold neo-Nazi views. Without urgent action, this number will only grow.

The scheme had been plotted online for months.

These are examples of posts from the online “Charlottesville 2.0” Discord server set up by the organizers of the “Unite the Right” rally months in advance for use in planning the events in Charlottesville and coordinating with co-conspirators. In addition, Defendant Robert “Azzmador” Ray established “meetups” and chatrooms through the Daily Stormer’s website that co-conspirators and attendees were told to use throughout the weekend of August 11-12 to coordinate their actions.

I know NC law is on the books that driving over protestors blocking roadways isn't an offense. This is crossover for this channel and VA law.

Tyrone 7/17/2017, 4:21:17 PM

Sure would be nice.

Tyrone 07/17/2017

Is it legal to run over protestors blocking roadways?

I'm NOT just shitposting. I would like clarification. I know it's legal in NC and a few other states. I'm legitimately curious for the answer

Discord user “Tyrone” suggests that rally attendees drive over “protestors blocking roadways” using a tractor.

Discord user “Tyrone” asks if it is legal to run over protestors blocking roadways, and clarifies that his question is a serious one.

In an online Discord chat concerning what to bring and why allies should attend, Defendant Heimbach is pictured in a cartoon uniform with swastikas and the words “n*gger killer.”

And just as promised in those online chats...

From Charlottesville to Pittsburgh

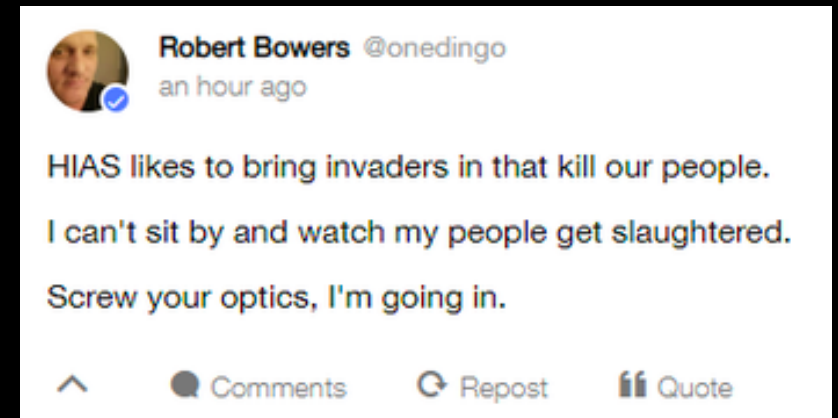

The Tree of Life shooter, Robert Bowers, interacted with the Charlottesville defendants online and followed their example in Pittsburgh.

Robert Bowers, the Pittsburgh shooter, had a verified account on Gab, the social media site favored by our Defendants. The Washington Post describes the still-live site as a “haven for white supremacists.” On Gab, Bowers’ bio read “jews are the children of satan.”

On Gab, Bowers shared over a dozen posts from Brad Griffin of Defendant League of the South. Here he is interacting with Griffin in a post.

In his last post on the neo-Nazi friendly site, Bowers wrote: “Screw your optics, I’m going in.”

That morning, Bowers killed 11 and wounded 7 at the Tree of Life Synagogue in Pittsburgh.

IFA's first major lawsuit is Sines v. Kessler.

On October 12, 2017, Sines v. Kessler was filed. Unlike any other lawsuit in the country right now, lead attorneys Karen Dunn and Roberta Kaplan have developed a legal strategy that goes after the root cause of the problem – the vast conspiracy of the alt-right that people like Jason Kessler, Richard Spencer and David Duke have spent years cultivating.

This case involves claims under the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and other civil rights statutes.

- The KKK Act was passed by the Reconstructionist Congress in the wake of the Civil War, in response to the widespread violence being perpetrated by vigilante groups like the Ku Klux Klan against the newly-freed slaves.
- It is one of the few civil rights statutes that pertains to private, rather than governmental, conduct.
- Among other things, the KKK Act of 1871 makes it illegal to conspire to deprive anyone of the equal protection of the law — this has been interpreted by the courts to mean that it is illegal to conspire to inflict racially-motivated violence on others. See Sines v. Kessler, 324 F. Supp. 3d 765, 782 (W.D. Va. 2018) (“Section 1985(3) reaches racial violence analogous to that alleged here.”).
- Given what happened in Charlottesville and what is continuing to happen in this country today, the statute has again become highly relevant.

Our litigation strategy in this case has already been effective.

- Jason Kessler, a defendant in our case, made extensive plans to hold a “Unite the Right 2” rally on the one-year anniversary of the first event. However, none of the other co-defendants agreed to join him, largely because of the threat of our case.
- Defendant Andrew Anglin, for example, said, “After Charlottesville, and the doxxings, and the lawsuits... I don’t want you to ruin your life by showing your face at a post-Charlottesville rally.”
- As a result, Unite the Right 2 did not really happen, with only a few stray individuals showing up to join Defendant Kessler in Washington, D.C.
- Similarly, Defendant Richard Spencer has said, “This lawsuit that I’m facing is just totally detrimental to what I’m doing.”
- The leader of hate group League of the South noted that the group can’t move forward with fundraising for a new headquarters because of the pending lawsuit.

This is the right strategy for our times.

The litigation strategy being pursued in Sines v. Kessler will not only bring the perpetrators of violence in Charlottesville to justice, but will help deter future attacks by:

- Establishing a legal precedent that exposes these extremists as a broad-based movement committed to racist, anti-Semitic violence.
- Creating a deterrent to potential participants from engaging in future, similarly violent events due to the threat of being sued.
- Drying up financial support – and bankrupting and dismantling the leaders of this violent movement - with large civil judgments against defendants.

It's not just about Charlottesville.
It's about our country.

The Defendants.

The defendants are 24 prominent neo-Nazi and white supremacist individuals and organizations, including Jason Kessler (the main organizer of Unite the Right); Richard Spencer, who coined the term “alt-right”; Andrew Anglin, the founder of the web’s leading anti-Semitic hate site, The Daily Stormer; and Christopher Cantwell, the subject of Vice’s Charlottesville documentary.

DEFENDANT KESSLER

“Our entire country would be better off if the South had won the Civil War.”

DEFENDANT SPENCER

“Our dream is a new society: an ethno-state.”

DEFENDANT ANGLIN

“The day is coming when we’re going to tear down the hoax [Holocaust] memorial in Berlin and replace it with a statue of Hitler 1,000 feet tall.”

DEFENDANT CANTWELL

“I’m trying to make myself more capable of violence.”

REV. SETH WISELWEY

MARCUS MARTIN

ELIZABETH SINES

The Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs are clergy, students, and Charlottesville residents including Reverend Seth Wispelwey, who joined arms with clergy—including rabbis—to peacefully protest the white supremacists who attacked their town.

Marcus Martin was walking with his fiancée, Marissa Blair, when Defendant Fields drove his car into the crowd of counter-protestors. Marcus pushed Marissa out of the way, saving her life, but was horribly injured.

Elizabeth Sines is a University of Virginia law student who counter-protested the rally and was nearly hit by Defendant Fields' car.

Other plaintiffs include Charlottesville community members grievously injured in the car attack and related violence.

Their response to our suit? Threats.

I'm never one to engage in conspiracy talk or blame everything on other ethnic groups but this Integrity First for America is a blatant front for powerful Jews to vent their ethnic hostility towards whites organizing as a political class.

Ironically the lesbian jew Roberta Kaplan that brought down the old legal meaning of marriage, is using archaic laws to punish the Alt-Right. The complaint alleged violations of the 1871 Ku Klux Klan Act and various state laws.

The timeline of Sines v. Kessler.

- October 11, 2017: Complaint Filed - Plaintiffs filed a lawsuit against white supremacists and hate groups for conspiring to cause racially-motivated violence in Charlottesville. The complaint alleges violations of the Ku Klux Klan Act of 1871 and various state laws.
- March 15, 2018: Default Entered Against Five Defendants - Plaintiffs obtained entries of default against five defendants, including neo-Nazi Andrew Anglin and the East Coast Knights of the KKK.
- May 24, 2018: Arguments on Motions to Dismiss – The federal district court in Charlottesville heard oral argument on Defendants’ motions to dismiss the case.
- July 9, 2018: Court Rejects Defendants’ Motions to Dismiss - In a huge victory for Plaintiffs, the federal district court issued a 62-page decision rejecting Defendants’ motions to dismiss. Among other points, the decision makes clear that the First Amendment does not protect violence.

- February 2019: Courts Reject Defendants’ Attempts to Avoid Liability – Judges rejected efforts to block Twitter and other social media from complying with subpoenas and threw out defendant’s bankruptcy claims.
- August 9, 2019: Court Sanctions Charlottesville Defendants – Plaintiffs win their first round of monetary sanctions against defendants Elliott Kline, Matthew Heimbach, and Vanguard America.
- January 5, 2020: Neo-Nazi Defendant Thrown in Jail – Elliott Kline (aka Eli Mosley) was thrown in jail and sanctioned thousands of dollars after being found in civil contempt.

Trial is scheduled for October 2020.

IFA's case is the only legal effort to take on the broad leadership of this violent movement.

- We are not aware of any government entity or organization pursuing claims against what was actually a massive conspiracy by white supremacists and neo-Nazis to commit racialized violence in Charlottesville in August 2017.
- State and federal prosecutors have pursued individual criminal cases, but not cases directed at the conspiracy as a whole.

We need your help to take on -- and take down -- the leadership of this violent extremist movement.
